The Narrow World.

Something had happened. There was such a rosy flush on her cheek, so bright a gleam in hereve, and on his face such an utter abandon of joy, that any one, even a man, could have guessed the truth. Fortunately they had chosen the hill road, the least traveled of all the ways that lead down from the Montecito Valley into Santa Barbara, and from 'the first half hour after the event they met no one.

By Charles Dwight Willard.

It was what the inhabitants of the Chap nel City call a "genuine Santa Barbara day." The sun shone warm and bright, and a soft perfumed breeze came out of th west. There was Jone in the air, although the calendar was set for midwinter. The birds sang in the trees above them, the squirrels chirped from the hillside, and their corses, wandering at times from the road, sank to the knee in a waving sea of flow-

"First of all," she said, breaking the silence of a whole minute, "you must tell my father."

"Certainly," said the young man.
"Who's afraid?"

"You have never seen papa do the role of the cruel parent," said the girl, "He can be quite a dragon. As you are a kinsman, however---

"A fifth cousin," cried the young man, with a laugh. "Well, fifth cousins are better than oothing; aren't they?"

"Truly. How else should we be here today?" Then the young man added, with peculiar and significant emphasis: "I am nclined to pride myself on that little The girl brought her horse to a sudden stop and turned her clear brown eyes, half opened under their long lashes, upon her "That little scheme," the repeated slowly,

I don't understand."

The young man laughed uneasily. "Why, Catherine," said be, "you don't mean that you have believed in the entertaining fiction about our great great-et-ceteragrandfather?" "Old Ebenezer Strong!" exclaimed the

irl. "How dare you call him fictitious, when I saw his portrait at my own grand-

"As your ancestor, my dear one, he is an andoubted reality-but as mine, I regret to ay, he is merely a figment of your worthy father's imagination. In short, I would fain break it to you as gently as possible, we are not fifth cousins at all, but just plain, ordinary—"
"Not fifth cousins!"

"No, darling. And if you are going to faint, please fall on this side, with your head right here on my shoulder." "I won't! Wretched boy, how could you deceive poor papa so?"

'I'didn't deceive him. He deceived himself. From the very beginning of our acquaintance he seemed determined to locate me somewhere on the Weston family tree, and you aided and abetted him in the attempt." "Richard Strong, how can you

"I have a sweet and gentle disposition, and when he asked me if I was not de-sociated from Ebenezer Strong, of West Brighton Center, and you looked at me so appealingly--" "I didn't any such thing!" "Why shouldn't I assent? I have doubt less had several hundred ancestors named Strong, and I took the chances that some of them rejoiced in the prenomen of Ebe nezer. It is just the sort of a name that my forbears were given to putting upon themselves, as an effective and continuous mortification of the flesh. A horsehair shirt, now, would be nothing to it." "You may laugh, if it pleases you!" said the girl, severely, "but if papa had known you were not a relative we should not be riding alone together. He generally disapproves of the Eastern people who pass the winter at the hotel." "If you really feel that I have been guilty of false pretenses," said the young man, drawing his horse a little nearer, "suppose we begin all over again."3 girl, steering to the opposite side of the road. "If we are to start afresh, let it be from the very beginning, three weeks ago."

"Now, as to your father," resumed the young man, "I think I understand him pretty well, because my one andonly parent, the governor himself, is constructed on much the same plan. Wherever he goes he is continually in search of the lost tribes of the Strong genealogy. The last letter I had from him in Colorado, where he is passing

A long, even canter in silence followed, and they were well into town before the conversation began again. Then, fearful of observation, they spoke in commonplaces. They turned into State street, stopped at the postoffice, the morning's mail having constituted the chief cause for the trip to town. Richard Strong dismounted and presently appeared with a letter in his hand. "None for you," he said. "This is for me, from the governor. I'll wager it has some-

"He has asked him to pay us a visit on the score of relationship, and your father—" "Well?" said the young man, excitedly. "He says he will start immediately—the very next day."

"Let me see the date of the letter. Ye gods! It has been delayed. He must have got here this morning." "The train has been in two hours," she said, glancing at her watch.

"I must see him immediately," said her companion, nervously, turning his horse first one way and then another. "Who would have dreamed that both the boys would take that consinship so seriously?"
"I did, sir. I knew from the very begin

"Hoo-Hoo-hoo- Hoo-e- Hoo-hoo-Hoo-hoo," shouts our old friend, the brown owl, from the top of one of the great trees that surround us. for this is his own special domain. Moonlight is beautiful at all times and seasons, but when a large wood, free from stunted undergrowth, is lit up by the soft light of a full moon, a network of light and not be seen elsewhere, for the light creeps along the interlated branches, looking like silver and ebony. Before you have fully made out the fitness of this com-parison to your satisfaction, some of the hoge silver beeches come in the range of light. The shadows from the limbs and branches above checker the boles, creep down them, and over the carpet of fallen leaves; shadows softly moving; at one time broken up, then for a short space they are massed, to break again, and scatter themselves in all directions. Where some of the leaves have fallen, leaving gaps and open spaces below, bright, bluegreen patches show, about which dark gray dots are astir. These are rabbits feeding on the short, tender grass; for nothing is left bare long; directly through some natural accident a larger growth ceases to exist, a smaller one of a very different natere is ready to take the place of it.-Corns hill Magazine.

Membership Coupon. Believing that much of the beauty of our National Capital is derived from its famous wealth of shade trees, and that these trees are now in danger of destruction by their natural enemies, and knowing that they cannot be preserved and cared for by the authorities owing to the parsimony and neglect of Congress, I hereby promise to do all I can to protect the tree or trees in front of or bordering on my place of residence, and for that purpose submit my name for membership in The Times Tree Protection League.
